To Whom It May Concern,

When looking back on my time spent in Dr. Natalie Mountjoy's Honors Biology course in the 2019 fall semester, I feel gratitude for having had Dr. Mountjoy as a professor. Not only did I learn a lot about the course material, but I also learned a lot about how to study effectively- which has proven to be useful in every other class I've had at Western Kentucky University thus far.

My freshman year at WKU was a major struggle for me. Adjusting to the classes, learning how to study, finding I wanted a major change… you name it, I was going through it. Dr. Mountjoy wasn't just my biology professor during this time, but someone I could go to for help on any class question, professor advice, and quite frankly life advice. I had no idea what I was doing in the fall but talking to someone who went has already gone through college and the uncertainty is really helpful and being a professor willing to help students in and outside of the classroom is one of the most important characteristics one could have.

Sincerely,

Hailey Brandon
